

- 0 By default, we have just one selector in "Base on" field without any theme selected by default — we should encourage to select what users really need.
- 1 Click on the select dropdown gives the list of pre-installed themes and, visually separated, "Upload new theme" option
- 2 Choosing "Upload new theme" option, reveals new "Choose theme file" button for uploading a theme. Moreover, using JS we might trigger click event on that button immediately to not make users explicitly click the button after already selecting "Upload new theme"

Ideally, this screen should be made responsive — on smaller screens it should show panels stacked vertically, on wider screens it should show the layout shown here.

There absolutely must be an option of fullscreen view for a panel. Responsive design themes might look different within the small iFrame and on the full-screen.

Theme preview panel.

Shows rendered index.html. If index.html is not found in the theme, the first *.html file(?). Allows to iterate over HTML theme files only. This is a preview-only panel. No "Source" toggle. The preview is changed if either another html file is selected in this panel, or in the "Theme files manager" below.

Theme files manager

Shows the file browser with content only. No "Preview" in this panel at all. Once an HTML file is selected, the #1 panel gets updated to preview it. Visually should be connected with the top panel of the theme preview.

Content

Shows the content. Presumably, the source toggle is not going to be used too often, so it is moved below the panel. But I am not even sure we need this toggle if the point-and-select mechanism works reliably enough.

Result

Panel showing the result of merging theme and content. Should be the same width as the content I assume to make comparison of before/after easier.

Big fat button

This is the button that applies the theme to the site. The theme-in-progress should never be applied to the running site. It is applied either with this button or from "Basic Settings" tab in the configlet.
